Hive a lovely swarm

Keeping Buzzzzy

Most people would have been scared.
Bill White held a section of hive. Bees crawled over every inch of it. A hundred or more bees flew around him.

But that sort of thing hasn't bothered White for at least nine years.

Twelve years ago, he bought the Ninth Street house next to his present home. "There were three bee hives on the back end of the property, and the guy (who sold the house) gave it to me."

It took three years before he wasn't scared by the bees. Surrounded by them, "the humming causes nervousness," he said.

"It was probably three years before it got so that didn't bother me."

He still gets nervous when he hears one buzzing around inside the netting that protects his face. "I just hope they sting toward the net," he said.

Smoke protects beekeepers also. "The bees have quite a communication system, built on odor," he said. By "smoking" them, "I've told then their hive's on fire, and screwed up communications."

Even so, beekeepers still get stung. "I went up last night, going to take care of these," he said, motioning to some hives in the back of his pickup. They were from one of his seven "remote" bee locations.

"Some of the hives had been turned over by the wind, and I went to turn them back over. ... I got a bunch (of beestings), mainly on the ankles. I wasn't wearing my boots because I didn't expect to have to do that."

"The only time you see them really aggresive is when something is upsetting them," White said. "Those we were working with last night were just really rasty. I would be too if some giant just tore my house apart."

"It started out purely as a hobby," White said. Now he runs it was both a hobby and a business. "As it got bigger, I didn't have much choice."

"We don't lose any money, but we're not in it to make a great deal," he said. "When I retire, I may well go into this full time."

He has 250 to 300 colonies. He is starting to merge them so they can get through the winter.

The bees must survive the winter on the honey they stored up from summer blossoms.

They also expend much energy to keep the hive warm. They cluster around the brood, which will hatch into bees, and vibrate to release heat. The brood must be kept about 92 degrees, White said, or it will die.

Right now, each colony holds about 30,000 bees. That makes White "daddy" to some 7,500,000 of the little buzzers.

Summer is their busy season. "You hope to have 60,000 in a colony," he said.

He needs that many to bring back nectar to create enough honey for him to share. "It takes 25,000 trips to make an ounce of honey," he said.

The last couple of years have been good to him and his bees. Heavy winter rains have led to an abundance of blossoms. Things have been tough in other years, though.

"In a bad year, the bees can't even make enough honey to sustain themselves," he said. Then he puts out a fine sugar for them.

The bees also do poorly if too many of them are in one area. If that happens, finding a new location can be a problem, White said.

"There are beekeepers who'll find a good location and just set them there," he said. "We like to treat the property owner like we'd like to be treated."

When he finds a good location, he checks to be sure the property owner doesn't mind if he puts his hives there. And a little honey for the owner usually sweetens the deal.

Some people welcome the bees, and even pay to have them near. Growers in central California need the bees to pollinate their almond trees. "If there are no bees, there are no almonds," White said.

The February bloom of the almond trees draws most of California's commercial beekeepers. "Last year, they also brought as many as 100,000 hives from out of state," White said.

"The last two years I chose not to go up, with the way the weather was." This year, February rains wiped out many of the bees. "I was very happy I had not gone," he said.

It's even a risk when the weather is good. "There is very little nectar in the almond blossom. If you're not careful, you can bring bees back in a lot worse shape than when they went," he said.

Local crops which benefit from the bees' pollination are strawberries and lemons.

"The interesting thing about citrus is, oranges, bees don't help at all, but they normally have a lot of nectar. Lemons don't have near as much nectar, but bees can increase the yield up to a third," White said.

More than 750,000 species of insects crawl, climb, fly and swim over the globe. But bees are among the few species which are beneficial to man.

They pollinate our domesticated plants and produce honey for our sweet teeth.

Some people who suffer from arthritis believe they have found another benefit from bees, in the most unlikely place — their sting.

"I still have people coming to get bees for arthritis," White said. "Generally, I figure I'm helping them out and I'll get a bunch and stick in a jar, and tell them how to administer the sting."

White is cautious in how he approaches it, though. "I haven't advocated it. I'm not a doctor, nor am I going to get into that situation."

But a few years ago, at a beekeepers convention in San Diego, two doctors advocated types of venom — bee stings in particular — as an arthritis treatment, White said.

"There must have been ... 1,000 in attendance at that presentation," he said. Many were elderly people, who raised bees as a hobby that would make them a living.

The second doctor got up to speak. "His first question was, 'How many of you have arthritis?' Not a hand went up. He said, 'I'm not surprised. Beekeepers don't get arthritis."

White said the doctor went on to say,
"When somebody gets in enough pain and they're willing to try anything, they come to me and I cure them."

White couldn't get his father to try the treatment, however. He had severe arthritis in his hand, but wouldn't listen to his son. "He said, 'No bee's gonna sting me."

Honey is the principal benefit White

The first year he had the hives, they had 20 to 30 quarts more honey than they needed. "I thought, what are we going to do with all this honey? ... So for Christmas, we put ribbons on it and gave it as Christmas gifts. It was really popular."

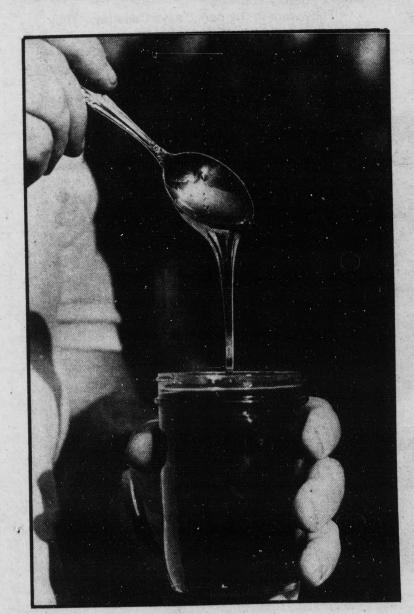

He soon started trying to sell his honey. Organic foods were just becoming popular about then, and many people were starting beekeeping for their own organic honey, he said.

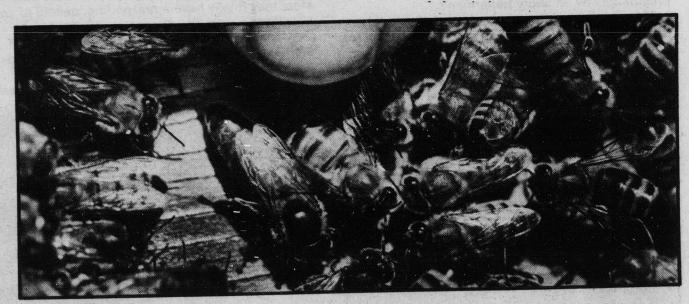

"When I first started trying to actually market it, I ran an ad that said, 'Pure honey for sale.' I didn't get too many calls, but I got some.

"Then I advertised, 'Pure fresh local honey,' and I got a few more calls. Then, 'Pure fresh local organic honey,' and you would have thought I was an answering service, I got so many calls."

Part-time inventor Ben Canaday of Upland examines the prosthetic beak mounted on "Cathy," one of about two dozen maimed pelicans found last year in Dana Point.

Pelican story has a happy ending

By Tony Saavedra

The stories ended with a question:
Would the artificial beaks invented by Upland resident Benjamin Canaday save some pelicans whose natural beaks had been mutilated, presumably by an angry fisherman?

Much local publicity was generated last July after Canaday, 28, responded to a televised call for help from the Orange County veterinarian treating the two dozen pelicans found in Dana Point.

The top halves of their beaks had been cut, leaving the pelicans unable to swallow fish scooped into their pouchlike mouths.

If the beaks could not be restored, the birds would have to be force-fed. Otherwise they would starve to death.

However, the latest prognosis indicates the story may finally have a real ending, devoid of any questions.

Canaday's homemade beaks — made from sterile gauze, window screens, yellow paint and a dash of cigarette ashes — are working.

Two of the eight remaining pelicans have been fitted with the artificial beak. Many of the others had already died.

And so Canaday, an unemployed inventor who sometimes plays his guitar for free food and drinks, has seemingly accomplished what professional animal doctors could not.

"They were in the dark," says Canaday. "They really didn't know what to try."

Doctors at the Crown Valley Animal Hospital in Laguna Niguel had tried attaching a fiberglass beak to the remaining stub on one of the pelicans.

The heavy beak was fastened to the bird's skull with a nail, which nearly reached the pelican's brain.

big dreams New club has some very

By Terri Tirella

The Foothill Soroptimist Club has high hopes and lofty goals for a group as new as it is. But they're dreams the club's members think are worth trying to make a reality.

Educating the public about battered children, supporting crafts programs for disadvantaged children and helping the House of Ruth are some of their major concerns.

Training awards and helping women are also among the club's aims, along with Youth Citizenship Awards to recognize contributions made by local students. The women's service organization was chartered by the Ontario club, which also helped form Soroptimists groups in Chino and Montclair.

"We have the same boundaries of Ontario, Upland and Rancho Cucamonga as the Ontario chapter, but we are a breakfast club while the Ontario Soroptimists meet at lunch," Joan Kruse, Foothill Soroptimist charter president, said.

Initially, Foothill Soroptimists will support their philanthropies with monies raised by fund-raiser until they can work out scheduling and opportunities for giving time, according to Kruse. Since almost all Soroptimists are working women, giving time isn't always easy. "We decided our priorities by having members list their (philanthropic) interests, when they are interested they will support it," she said.

The Foothill Soroptimists will hold a fashion show fund-raiser Nov. 19 at Red Hill Country Club. Themed "Holiday Symphony," the show will feature holiday fashions from Unique Boutique, Silver Woods for men and Tiny Tots clothes. Joanne Fitzgibbons, of Fitzgibbons Color and Fashion Center in Upland, will emcee the benefit show.

Awareness, advocacy and action is waht Soroptimists are all about, according to Kruse. When AB 1138 was before the state Legislature, a bill to have day care centers for adults in nursing homes, Soroptimists supported the bill with a heavy letter writing campaign.

Kruse said the Foothill Soroptimists' key goal is to aid battered children. "We would like to be more effective — maybe print brochures to make people aware of the problem or direct more money. We also support House of Ruth but would like to do more for them," she said.

Other club priorities include the Search and Rescue Program, along with the the Swift Water Rescue Program; Santa Claus Inc., donating books to the local library, and the YMCA Big-Little Sister

"Our esprit de corp is excellent, they (members) are very enthusiastic, dedicated and really want to do things," Kruse said.

She said the club, which meets Thursday mornings at Astara in Upland, has 29 members and is growing.

"We're a younger group than Ontario, most of us are in our late 30's early 40's. Most of our children are at an age where they don't need us as much and we have more time," she said.

Soroptimists, which are comparable to the men's Rotary Club, began in 1921 "to foster the ideal of service." They will usually support anything having to do with the development of human rights - they act as advisers to the United Nations in those kind of issues, according to Kruse.

The local club also supports a high school organization or students at Alta Loma, sharing in activities and offering guidance to the group and its Soroptimists are also open to male membership - but to Kruse's knowledge there are no such members in local organizations.

Any working woman interested in learning more about Foothill Soroptimists may call Nancy Winger, growth and membership chairman, 982-5330.

New uses for once-wasted fruit 'culls'

By JOHN H. NICHOLSON

In the tale of citrus in this corner of the country, it was mentioned that some fruit was not suitable for the fresh fruit market. In the early days, disposal of the "culls" was by dumping somewhere, hoping nobody would notice or complain and that the stuff would disappear.

There were costs in hauling and dumping, and no income from that fruit. Its main fault was only in appearance. It still contained the good juice, vitamins, and nutrients that fruit with top quality appearance contained.

Personnel of the California Fruit Growers Exchange (now Sunkist Growers Inc.) set about to find methods of utilizing the so-called culls. Making marmalade looked promising, and a small plant was built in San Dimas to try the idea. That was shortly after World War I. While marmalade production never became a huge success nor used many culls, research never stopped. New methods and products were developed and the picture brightened.

In 1926, a new, larger plant was built in Ontario, a location considered to be about in the center of western citrus production. A variety of good products was turned out. Marmalade was dropped.

The Ontario plant was named The Exchange Orange Products Co., handling all kinds of citrus except lemons. About the same time, The Exchange Lemon Products Co. plant was built in Corona. Both plants thrived and grew.

Research and development programs increased, and the products were soon in demand worldwide. No longer was it necessary to dump fruit. What had been called culls became "products grade fruit," a far more correct term.

Best of all, growers earned a profit from theirproducts fruit, as opposed to their previous dead losses. As methods and markets improved, so did the profits.

Packing houses installed large bins for their products fruit, which was emptied into big trucktrailer rigs, as needed, for hauling to the processing plants. In addition to fruit from closer areas, fruit came from Arizona, Coachella Valley, and the San Joaquin Valley.

Today, the larger, double-trailer rigs carry as much as 25 tons per load and are a frequent sight on the highways. An around-the-clock, seven-day-aweek operation, the Ontario plant can process 4,000 tons per day. That's equal to 160 of those big highway loads; a lot of fruit.

On arrival at the plant, fruit is weighed in the trailer. While unloading, sample fruit is automatically selected from each load and sent to a test laboratory. There, tests determine sugar or solids contents and other factors, to credit the source packing houses accordingly. Until processing calls for it, fruit is held in large bins.

When moving on to processing, the fruit passes through intricate washing machines, then over inspection conveyors, under the trained eyes of crews of inspectors. Any fruit showing damage or signs of possible decay is removed and sent to cattle feed useage. Only good, wholesome fruit goes onward.

Entering the juice extraction rooms, the fruit meets multiple rows of juicing machines, with most capable of handling more than 1,000 pieces of fruit per minute. There, the juice goes one way and the peel goes another way.

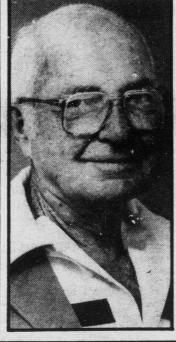

After screening and a quick pasteurization, the juice enters large concentrators. Here, under extremely high vacuum, the juice is literally boiled at temperatures near 75 degrees. All of the goodness remains while enough water is boiled off to reduce the concentrated product to 1/5th or 1/6th of its original volume.

Juices may be sold in containers ranging from large stainless steel tank trailers, holding many hundreds of gallons, down to the little popsicles known as "Otter-Pops," made for freezing in your own kitchen. (Some kids cry for them, like we did for Castoria). Much concentrate is stored in huge freezer rooms until needed as the base for literally hundreds of formulated products. Packaging in the plant may be in cans, bottles and other containers. to meet the needs of Sunkist's own brands and those of many private labelers.

Inl

The peel and pulp, minus juice, provide other products such as citrus oils, pharmaceuticals and until recently, pectin. All that remains becomes livestock feed. Liquids pressed out of the feedstock becomes molasses.

Sanitation in the plants is a top priority. That. along with other water needs, means the plant produces considerable amounts of waste water. The Ontario plant, for example, has a water disposal farm seven miles away, via 12-inch pipeline, to the southeast. There, it helps grow fine crops.

Home is sweet for nation's elderly

By Terri Tirella

Death, the grim reaper, comes only once for any of us. For most elderly Americans, it isn't a fear of that inevitability that is haunting it's a fear of staying in this world too long that leads to the most anxiety.

That philosophy is what spawned Seniors Supportive Services, an organization dedicated to helping senior citizens live at home with freedom and dignity.

"Older people don't fear death, they fear nursing homes. They think nursing homes are the end of the line," Laura Westlin-Dorner, business co-owner, said.

She and her partner Nell Foltz started their Upland business after completing certificates in gerentology at Chaffey College. "Our major goal is to help older people live independently at home," Westlin-Dorner said.

Seniors Supportive Services provides marketing, cooking, clean-up, laundry services and assistance with bathing, dressing and walking.

"We can make contact with other agencies our client may need and act as an intermediary. We know how to fill out government forms, Social Security forms and Medicare forms. We can help them decipher the jargon," Foltz said.

Westlin-Dorner said services provided for clients can be as much as eight hours a day six or seven days a week, or as little as two hours a month. "It depends on their need. We get together with the client and the family and put together a personal plan of service."

The seniors service doesn't provide 24-hour nursing care or heavy housecleaning. "We train our employees in nutrition, home safety, and physiology and psychology of aging," Foltz said.

According to Westlin-Dorner, nursing home care averages to about $2 an hour; while Seniors Supportive Services cost $6 an hour. "But care in a nursing home doesn't mean you're getting personal service. You can't go to bed when you want or are not allowed to eat what you want.

"Most people like to have some decision about their lifestyle and to do as much for themselves as possible. They don't want to five up their dignity or lose their freedom and can't come and go as they please or have visitors whenever they want," she continued.

"We've seen one of our clients get physically stronger and much happier since we took over her care," Westlin- Dorner said.

According to Westlin-Dorner, the woman had suffered a fall and had been in the hospital. Her adult-child lived too far away to meet her daily needs, so the family was considering placing her in a .. nursing home.

"When we met her, she was bent over in her chair and wouldn't talk at all to us. She was scared. The adult- child didn't know what to do, he was afraid she would harm herself," according to Westlin-Dorner.

She and Foltz decided to take on the case. "When we started working with her we were meeting all her needs. Since then our client has gotten physically stronger and happier and now she is meeting her own needs. We help with shopping but she is making the decisions."

She said 24-hour nursing care ornursing homes are necessary because they provide service to clients who need their needs met in the middle of the night and provide services to elderly people who can no longer be left alone.

To be eligible for Seniors Supportive Services, a potential client must be 60 years or older, ambulatory and able to request service and relate their needs.

In the company's first ten months of operation, only one death had occurred.

"We had a client who was terminally ill. We worked with other agencies, Hospice and Visiting Nurses Association. She died (of cancer) at home. I know she was happier much longer ... it's an important choice of a lot of older people want to make - to die at home. Most have had a lot of hospitalization and are not pleased about being there at all," Westlin-Dorner said.

The service employs people from age 17 to 59. "We want to keep older women employed and are trying to bridge the generation gap with young people. Young people are as sensitive in caring for an older person as older people. They are learning to be more understanding," Foltz said. Some clients prefer a younger employee, some don't trust them. "We try to match employees to clients. It takes awhile for them to trust one another ... but they end up being friends, almost a part of the family.

"For come clients we are their only communication with the outside world. Some family members find it difficult to visit once a week, particularly during bad weather," Foltz said.

"We treat our clients with respect and allow them to make their own decisions. A lot of people have the idea that an older person is like a child, not capable of making a decisions. They have the same needs and wants that any person has, they just don't hear as well or see as well, but that's no reason to shelf them," Westlin-Dorner said.

One of the organization's oldest clients is Frances Cathcart, a longtime Upland resident. Cathcart will celebrate her 92nd birthday Oct. 31.

"She washes her clothes on a scrub board and hangs them on the line, she can cook for herself. I mostly make her breakfast and sometimes help her with bathing," Lois DeCarlo, a Seniors Supportive Services employee, said.

DeCarlo said she does some cleaning, washing dishes, and vacuuming. "I do a little bit of cooking but not much."

Cathcart was on the Meals on Wheels program because her doctor wanted her to get one nutritious meal, according to DeCarlo. "She didn't do too well because a lot of the food she didn't like. After about two months we let her do cooking on her own and she did well, she gained six pounds."

Part of Seniors Supportive Services is the socializing and companionship the employees provide. "We will go on Dial-a-Ride and shop together. We talk. She doesn't want to go to a nursing home and she doesn't belong in one," DeCarlo said.

"Sometimes I put things away and I don't know right off where it is. She (DeCarlo) has all the patience in the world, she's my guardian angel," Cathcart said.

"When I was in the hospital (recovering from a hip injury) I wanted to go home so bad. I like being in my own home, I love my home and everything in it. I can do as I please, and they are always cheery and ready to let me do as I want and eat what I want to eat," Cathcart said.

Group signs up for information on increasing problem

It has become a sign of the times.

The West Valley Chapter of the Mental Health Association office at 221 E. D St., Ontario, is sporting a new sign to inform the community about its activities.

The association is responsible for keeping the community informed about mental health issues and to disseminate information through a series of support groups, an information and referral system and a speakers' bureau.

Dan Totaro, chapter president, explained that information on mental health is important to one out of every four people since mental problems touch 25 percent of the people in the United States.

The West Valley Chapter offers two support groups to the community: Ups and Downs for manic depressive and depressed people, and Who Am I Now That I'm Not Working?, a support group for the unemployed.

The chapter also provides a speakers' bureau for service organizations, schools and other groups needing information about mental health. For more information on the Mental Health Association programs, call 986-2923 between 8 a.m. and noon.

PMS — the cure is coming slowly

By Tony Saavedra

Despair is the common thread lacing the lives of the women who every month chart their moods, pains and aches.

They are looking for a trend, a cycle that could reveal the answer to their oscillating emotions and physical ailments.

Some have been bounced from one doctor to another unable to find a diagnosis for their symptoms. A few have tried suicide after psychotic and violent episodes in which they've beaten their children or injured a loved one.

For many, the symptoms have not led to bouts of violence, but have nevertheless interferred with their lives.

And so they are graphing their monthly menstrual periods along with the disabling symptoms, hoping to find the key to their Jekyll and Hyde personalities.

A connection could mean the women are suffering from premenstrual syndrome, a physical disorder that has been treated sucessfully in England and more recently the United States.

For roughly two weeks before menstruation, these women are afflicted with the various symptoms that suddenly disappear during the menstrual period, says Sally Shaw, a nurse practitioner who treats PMS at a gynecology center in Upland.

Shaw says the syndrome remains in the shadowy realms of medicine, with some doctors and psychiatrists debating the nature of the

Is it a physical ailment or just all in the mind? Is premenstrual syndrome a catch-all excuse for moodiness and general aches?

Doctors also cannot agree on a treatment. Much is still unclear about premenstrual syndrome and the more than 500 symptoms that have been recorded, concedes Shaw.

"I'm not sure that what I'm telling women today will be the same in 10 years."

Nervous tension, irritability, cravings for sweet foods, dizziness, low backache and confusion are only a few of the symptoms attributed to premenstrual syndrome.

The number of women suffering from the disorder has not been determined.

However the director of an East Coast PMS clinic is quoted in a recent Saturday Evening Post article as estimating that 85 to 90 percent of all women experience some symptoms during their menstrual years.

Dr. Ronald Norris, head of the clinic in Lynnfield, Mass., also estimated that 5 to 10 percent of the women experience symptoms severe enough to warrant treatment.

Locally, nurse practitioner Shaw has seen 30 premenstrual syndrome patients since the office at 600 Mountain Avenue began treating the malady in

On a larger scale, Dr. Perry Maloff says about 250 women have passed through his PMS clinic. offered one day a week at Charter Oak Hospital in Both professionals have treated women who are on the verge of suicide. Marriages have been broken, relations severed.

"I've seen women who otherwise are good housewives or mothers, but once a month they abuse their husbands and children," says Maloff.

While no one is sure what causes premenstrual syndrome, the most popular theory deals with a deficiency of progesterone, a female sex hormone normally produced in large quantities after ovulation.

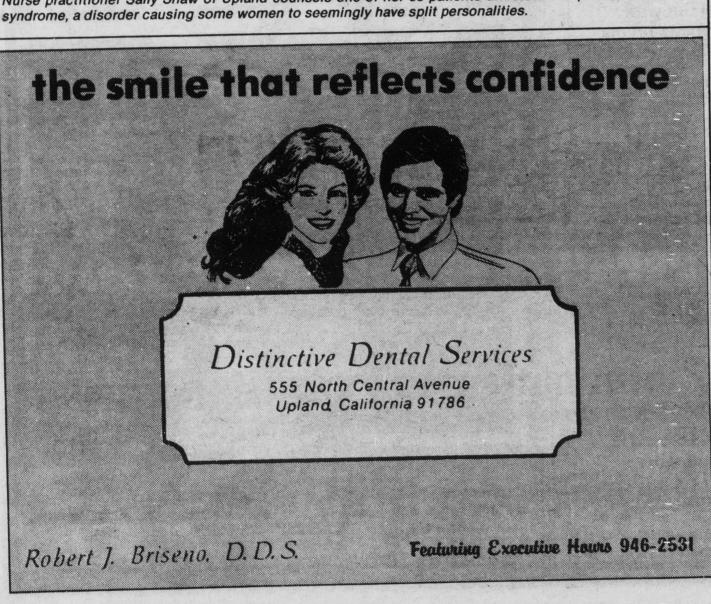

Interruptions in the hormonal cycle, such as pregnancies, can decrease the amount of progesterone in the system.

Dr. Maloff carries the hypothesis a bit farther, theorizing that the drop in progesterone causes a similar deficiency of endorphins, an opiate-like

Pelican saga has a happy ending

Kathy Frey

This maimed pelican awaits a "transplant" for its upper bill. A new artificial bill developed by an Upland man seems to be working.

The beak was soon biologically rejected when the living tissue of the stub reacted against the metal bolts, said Canaday. He said the fiberglass also prevented the tissue from receiving oxygen.

Canady suggested a simple variation that would not require surgery and would allow the tissue to "breathe."

He wrapped gauze around a model beak and covered it with epoxy material. Stainless steel mesh, used for window screening, was then rolled around the rear end.

When the epoxy hardened, Canady removed the inside model and brushed the hollow beak with a mixture of yellow paint and cigarette ashes to match the bird's natural coloring.

The pelican's stub was then slipped into the metal screening and attached with a few carpet staples and a hoseclamp.

"A lot of things are so simple that they are overlooked," says Canaday, who had no prior experience treating animals, pelicans or otherwise.

The pelican with the biggest stub, Gregg, received the first beak. Now residing in Sea World, Gregg is recuperating nicely, aside from some minor problems when the saltwater rusted the staples.

Cathy Lee, the second recipient, is also on the road to recovery. And that's some accomplishment.

A pickier pelican never lived. Eight pounds of flapping feathers, Cathy beat her wings furiously recently when brought into the examining room at the hospital for a quick inspection. Canady discovered a few holes in her beak and quickly patched them with epoxy glue and a tongue

A somewhat relieved Cathy was carried back to rejoin the 12 injured pelicans housed in a one-time dog kennel, now converted into a makeshift marine aviary.

Most of the birds, including some hurt during run-ins with fishhooks and sailboat masts, sat calmly on a large perch in front of a picture window, looking like nervous convicts plotting an escape from their blue-tiled prison.

For their part, hospital workers would like nothing better than to release them back into the

For one thing, the pelicans eat about 50 pounds of frozen fish a day, putting a strain on the hospital

The facility has tried selling novelty T-shirts and organizing aluminum can drives to support the ravenous appetites.

And Canaday is planning to raise money by taking a 26-mile trip from Dana Point to Catalina Island — on a homemade raft made from large, bottled-water containers.

Canaday has not been paid for his artificial beaks nor reimbursed for the 112-mile drives twice a month to the hospital and back.

It's all volunteer work, initially begun as a challange and ending as an act of concern.

"I don't think I can make a future out of this," he says, grinning. "There isn't much call for pelican beaks."

But Canaday is hoping to get rich off a few of his other inventions, which to date have not received financial backing.

His latest gizmo is called the "Pocket Leader," a small reel that dispenses fishing line and can be easily carried.

The components are relatively simple: one empty dental floss container, a spool and fishing

He has also built an 111/2-foot fishing boat with swivel chairs and a 11/2-horsepower engine.

And if all else fails, he'll keep playing in bars for $20 a night and tips.

"Free drinks and food is all you need," says Canady, who quit his job repairing copier machines about three years ago because he was tired of the

Among the items on display are 2,000-year-old stone beads and pendants, cogstones, ax heads, round stone balls, metates, mortors and pestles and atlati dart points.

According to Bernice McAllister, Chaffey College anthropology professor, the Indians hunted with atlatl spears rather than bows and arrows. They also processed food, flaked stone tools, played games and pursued a spiritual life.

These Indians lived in the area for about 4,000 years and inhabited a large settlement located between what is now Base Line Road and Foothill Boulevard, near Vineyard Avenue.

They appear to have died out, moved on or joined with later Shoshonean arrivals more than 1,000 years ago.

The stone materials used in some of the tools appear to be imported from the Mojave Desert, Mono County and the coast and Channel Island areas, indicating an established trade routes thousands of years ago. GROSSI stop at nothing to Rain or shine, there's a group of people in Rancho Cucamonga who spend a part of each workday dodging cars and directing traffic.

They are crossing guards, armed with stop signs and escorting schoolchildren across intersections on the way to and from school.

City crossing guards are part-time employees whose wages ($4.35 an hour) are paid partially by the city and partially by the school district which they serve and are under the direction and supervision of the Rancho Cucamonga Sheriff's station.

Sergeant Jimmy Watkins, traffic management division, said the department does a thorough background investigation on applicants and crossing guards must pass a physical examination.

Although authorized to stop traffic at busy intersections for the safe crossing of children, the crossing guards get little training, usually an hour-long talk with Watkins about writing down descriptions of vehicles and suspects. Sometimes trainees will work with a seasoned veteran, sometimes not.

"They have a big responsibility — getting the kids across the street safely and handling traffic. Sometimes drivers don't see them, and sometimes they (drivers) don't care," Watkins said.

"My biggest beef are drivers making lefthand turns ... they look at me and keep on turning. I almost have to step out in front of them to stop them," said Connie Johnson, a crossing guard at the corner of Archibald and Foothill boulevards.

"Sometimes people are driving too fast and not watching for you; they get on you too fast," she said.

Johnson has been helping children cross streets for five years, which gives her more seniority than most local crossing guards. "You have to be alert and have your eyes open at all times. You can always expect that drivers will do the unexpected," she said.

One of the problems Johnson sees facing the city and school district is the limited hours the guards are now allowed to work. "We've talked to school boards and the city because we didn't feel we were covering hours children are coming from and going to school."

Johnson said crossing guards previously stopped traffic for half an hour before and after school while children crossed. "Now it's only five minutes before school and 10 minutes after school in the afternoon."

The possibility of being injured in a traffic collision faces crossing guards daily. "Getting hit and being left crippled would be my worst fate. There have been times when I have had drivers coming at me at 60 miles per hour,"

Johnson said.

"My biggest fear is when I'm in the middle of the street and I can't get them (drivers) stopped," crossing guard Meyer Perlstein said. Perlstein crosses children at the corner of 19th and Jasper.

A flashing caution light will soon be installed at that corner because of the high rate of speed exhibited by drivers, said Perlstein, noting that 19th Street is a state highway.

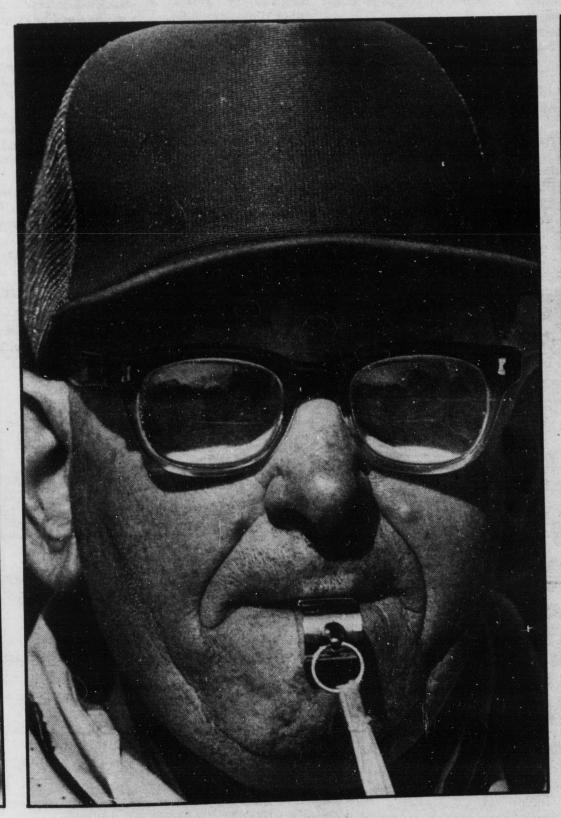

"Drivers go from 50 miles per hour through

Meyer Perlstein (far left) holds his stop sign so high no driver can miss it. Perlstein (top left) gestures to hold up children coming from school, while he helps other children across. A neighbor allows Perlstein (above right) to get a refreshing drink of water. Perlstein (left) blows his whistle loud and clear to make sure motorists know they must stop to let children cross. His hands (above) absent-mindedly fiddle with his whistle while he waits for children who come from school and need to cross 19th Street.

Now that daylight savings time has ended and the Halloween costumes have been put away for another year, can winter be far behind.

If you listen very closely, you can probably hear the turkeys gobbling as they decide which among them will become the center of attraction on Thanksgiving.

We still have a few weeks to plan for that big

I had lunch the other day with Dean Logan, the proud owner of two of our local Wendy's. One at 969 W. Foothill in Upland and the other in Rancho Cucamonga at 9538 Foothill Blvd.

Something brand new has been introduced...Hot

Stuffed Baked Potatoes!

Not just any old kind of stuffing but tummy warming and oh, so satisfying. Some of your choices include the following. A large, fluffy, steaming baked potato stuffed with grated American cheese and covered with cheddar cheese sauce and Wendy's own famous meaty chili or one stuffed with cheddar cheese and topped with real bacon bits. Some of the other variations might be more to your liking but I opted for the one stuffed with the cheese and bacon bits, a tasty and satisfying lunch.

Of course Wendy's is always a delicious value but with the coupons published on these pages the value is even more attractive so do clip and save.

Espiau's at 1542 W. Holt in Pomona is celebrating their 50th anniversary but you could be the big winner of the grand prize being offered. You will have to hurry, registration ends November 6th. This is a real plum of a prize...a trip for two to Puerto Vallarta, Mexico! As I have said on many an occasion you definitley cannot win unless you enter.

Espiau's Restaurante and Cantina has been a favorite of Mexican food lovers in the Pomona Valley since 1933. Their famous Mexican salad is a big favorite with diners. Try the tostadas or the combination dinners and I can guarantee you won't leave feeling hungry. With any one of the many selections might I suggest a frosty Margarita to enhance your meal.

Reservations are always a good idea so do call

Parents seek crossing guards for safety

here. We're hoping it will cut about down 75 percent of the heavy speeding with drivers going through the zone (crossing area) at 25 or 30 miles per hour, a speed where they will be better able to be stopped," Perlstein said.

Peristein said he had been told the installation of the flashing yellow light may take as long as two months to be installed and that Caltrans workers have been surveying the corner in preparation for installation.

The children are general well-behaved, say both crossing guards. "They tend to get a little hyper around holidays and are a little hard to handle because they're chasing each other, but usually they are pretty good," Johnson said.

While the children are well-behaved, drivers are not, according to Perlstein. "They don't practice basic courtesy. If I get them stopped, they are abusive, they don't give the children a chance to get across or allow me to get back across the street."

"As long as I am here I will, to the best of my ability, not let anything happen to my children," Perlstein said. And he's at the corner every school day, rain or shine. "During the rainy season most parents will take their children to school. There may only be about a half-dozen children walking, but I'm here in my boots and rainwear."

Perlstein said the city has no insurance program for crossing guards. "Since the city does not provide (this protection), I had to sign a statement saying I would not hold the city liable if I were injured."

Liability is a problem parent Louisa Meza has been facing while trying, so far unsuccessfully, to get a crossing guard at the corner of Turner and Feron. The crosswalk serves first-through fifth-graders going to Cucamonga Elementary and sixth-through eighth-graders at Rancho Cucamonga Middle

"We parents feel there is a need, we have even volunteered and have asked to be trained but the city won't let us," Meza said.

She said city officials told her to let parents "cross the kids, but don't let us know."

"Authorities did paint a crosswalk but that's not going to stop the cars and it gives children a false sense of security. There is a need for adult supervision there," she said.

"City engineers have guidelines and criteria and do a survey, counting cars and kids at busy corners," Watkins said. "They put the information in a formula and then make a decision."

"There were surveys done last year and it was decided that corner did not have a traffic problem," Watkins said.

As far as taking parent volunteers, Watkins said it was too dangerous. "Legally if a volunteer gets hurt it's a lawsuit for the city," he said.

According to Lauren Wasserman, Rancho Cucamonga city manager, Meza made a similar request for a crossing guard last year, initiating the first study.

"A preliminary indication is there is not a great speed problem there, (the corner of Turner and Feron)," Wasserman said. A sheriff's car equipped with radar observed the area for a two-hour period and saw only one car speeding.

"We will look at it again and if warranted, we will deal with it at that time," Wasserman

He said the city will not sanction volunteer crossing guards because if an accident occurred, the city would be liable.

"If they (parents) do it on their own, that's their business," he said.

At the Rancho Cucamonga Wine Festival

It was a terrific weekend for The Daily Report booth at the Third Annual Rancho Cucamonga Wine Festival.

Large crowds gathered around the booth eager to pick up their free Daily Report tote bag and souvenir wine tabloid while trying to win the grand prize, a Texas Instrument home computer.

The Daily Report booth was special in many ways. In addition to giving out free Daily Report tote bags, souvenir wine tabloids and copies of the Rancho Cucamonga Times, Upland News and The Daily Report, the booth spensored an exciting and unique contest.

booth sponsored an exciting and unique contest.

To win the grand prize contestants guessed the number of pennies in two large wine bottles. The amount of pennies in the wine bottles represented the amount of money that readers could have saved if they would have utilized the food coupons published in The Daily Report for the month of September.

The grand prize for the correct answer included accessories and a Home budget program.

The winner Dana Robertson was at first reluctant to enter. "He didn't even want to fill out an entry form", said his wife Toni. "I never win anything", said Dana. "At least I never did before!". "The only reason I entered this time was because of Toni. She kept after me to try." And so with the prompting of his wife, Dana ventured a guess and won! a guess and won!

The amount of money readers could have saved by utilizing the food coupons in The Daily Report for the month of September was a whopping $39.85!

The pennies in the wine bottles were donated to the winner's favorite charity.

Dana and his wife chose the American Heart Association.

Another highlight was the pictorial history display depicting the histories of Rancho Cucamonga and the local wineries.

This exhibit attracted a great deal of attention and so did the sight of Daily Report carrier Shawn Fenderoff.

Shawn was dressed as a cluster of grapes and toted the banner "The Daily Report, Best of the Bunch". I think that our booth was extremely pop and coordinator of The Daily Report's booth.

"We had almost a thousand entries in our contest", she said. "We gave away well over 5,000 tote bags, 3,000 wine tabloids, 1,500 copies of The Daily Report, Rancho Cucamonga Times and Upland News. We handed out more than 2,000 copies of our flyer "We Would Like To Hear From You" which told readers who, how and where to submit their news releases, letters to the editor and photos.

"From the designing and painting of the colorful banners and signs by Bobbie Greiner, account executive, to the sewing of the costume for The Daily Report carrier by Lynette Larter, senior advertising artist, to the creation of the pictorial history display by Mary DeLira, advertising artist, a great deal of careful planning and hard work went into The Daily Report booth.

Take The Daily Report tote bag for example. A lot of thought went into deciding what we should give away. We wanted to give out something that people would find useful.

People could use the tote bag during the festival to carry their purchases, and they could also reuse their children. bags at a later date. I heard many people commenting that were going to reuse the tote bag for their children at Halloween.

"I was very proud of our booth", Ms. Murray said. "There were no sour grapes!"

Sports

Scott goes extra mile for Scots

By Tom Vivian

Runners, much like place kickers in professional football, are usually perceived as being a bit different.

The stereotype is a familiar one. Runners are either obsessed individuals intent on destroying their bodies by outreaching their physical limitations, or they began running as a physical answer to some deeply rooted childhood psychosis.

Recently, Steve Scott returned to his alma mater and spoke to Upland High School's track and cross country runnners and his demeanor went a long way in dispelling the unflattering aspects of the runner's public perception.

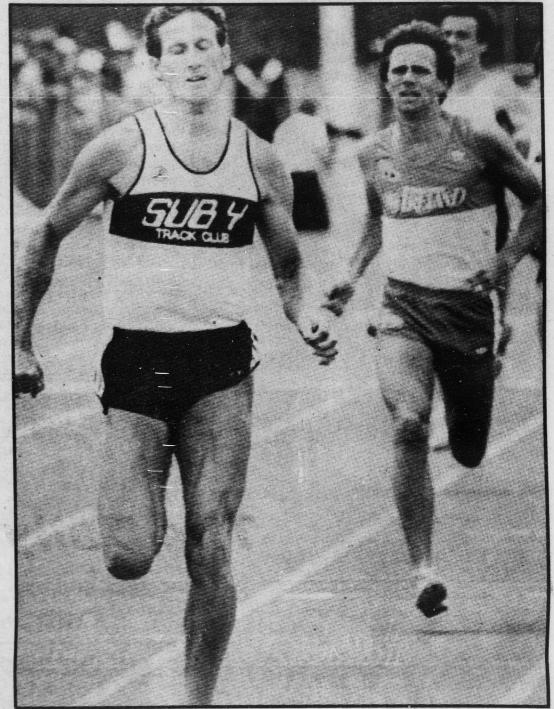

Scott, America's premier miler and among the top three international runners in the event, graduated from Upland in 1974.

The mile mark is of three American records Scott holds. He set the mile record of 3:47.69 in Olso in July, 1982, just .36 seconds off Coe's world record. In addition, Scott has the U.S. 1,500 (3:31.24) and 2,000-meter (4:54.71) marks.

Although he has been a dominant force on the international track circuit since his collegiate days, Scott told the young runners that the start of his career was less than distinguished.

He barely earned a cross country letter his freshman year, and the next year he split his time between track and baseball. But at the urging of head track coach Bob Loney, said he decided to get serious about running in his junior year.

Steve Scott in win this year over Eamonn Coghlan in San Jose.

The next two years he was a force in CIF running, and his efforts helped pace the Highlanders to a team championship. Although he decided to devote more effort to the sport which eventually became his career, Scott has kept things in perspective.

"No race is a tife and death situation," Scott said. "Even the Olympics."

The mile first gained widespread popularity with Roger Bannister's breaking of the four-minute barrier in in 1954. For most of the next two decades, milers raced against the clock in a continuous effort to break and set new records.

But in the mid-1970's, however, Scott and two English competitors changed all that. Challenging each other in the press almost as often as they did on the track, Sebastian Coe and Steve Ovett's personal battle for the mile pinnacle against Scott has totally changed the events promotion.

World records are still a priority, but the importance of billing the races as mano a mano events has taken over the sport.

Scott first beat Ovett in 1977, and has raced against him at least 15 times since then. Scott has oftimes accused Ovett and Coe of dodging races against him.

Scott, however, welcomes any opportunity to compete against Ovett, his most outspoken competitor.

"I'll go after him," he said. "I'm not afraid to race him."

However critical he has been of Coe and Ovett's career pacings, Scott has taken shots from his own detractors here in the United States.

Two years ago, Scott and runners Mary Decker and Carl Lewis were sharply criticized by former professional basketball player Wilt Chamberlain for their preference of European meets over American races.

Chamberlain, who sponsored a Los Angeles-based track and volleyball clubs, said Scott and the others were being "unpatriotic" by concentrating their efforts across the Atlantic.

Although, it was reported otherwise in some circles, Scott said he was unaffected by Chamberlain's salvos.

"I just sloughed it off," he said.
"What does Wilt Chamberlain know about track and field?"

Scott added that he felt Chamberlain had no right to criticize his actions when the former Los Angeles Lakers' star had himself spurned the Olympic Basktetball team in 1960 to sign with the Harlem Globetrotters.

He now lives in Arizona, and trains at Arizona State University.
Although his career has been both highly successful and both highly successful and lucrative, he described it as one "riddled with frustrations."

One additional frustration he would like to avoid from adding to that list is a poor showing in next summer's Olympic games.

"I'm already working psychologically for the Olympics."

In 1982, Scott defeated John Walker in meet at Berekley.

Gary Havro was low net winner with a 70.4.

CC big winner in golf tourney

Larry Mosher won the low gross and Gary Havro won the low net, but the big winner at the first Chaffey College Invitational golf tournament was the school's athletic department.

Bob Olivera, the Chaffey athletic director, said the benefit event had raised about $2,000 for the athletic coffers.

"We were expecting 50-60 people and we got 84 entries," Olivera said of the tournament, held last Friday at Upland Hills Country Club. "People wanted another one this year. I said 'no, not this year,' but we do plan to make it an annual thing."

For his low gross score of 74 on the par-70 course, Mosher won a circular saw. Havro's low net score of 70.4 won him a drill and tool box.

Joy Purdue, the ladies low net winner with a 70.1, earned golf shoes for her effort.

Ken Neff won awards — a dozen golf balls and a bonus pack of balls - for coming closest to the pin on the 17th hole and winning the long drive competition. His winning drive was 300 yards.

Closest to the pin winners on the seventh and 15th holes were Havro and Kim Kimsby, respectively. Each player received a dozen balls.

The big prize — a 1984 Ford Thunderbird - still belongs to Citrus Motors. The car was offered for a hole-in-one on the par-3, 163-yard second hole.

"One person came close, but No. 2 is a tough hole," Olivera said. "The pin was in a difficult position, way at the back of the green."

The athletic director said options are still being considered on how to spend the money raised by the tournament. The money could be spent on a leaper machine or on landscaping around the baseball field, Olivera said.

Playoff opportunities grow slim for Upland

When the dust clears following this week's prep football games, the playoff picture in the Baseline League should become a lot clearer.

With just two games remaining in the regular season, Upland High School's squad still has a genuine shot at a CIF Eastern Conference post-season berth. Problem is, they can't do it all by themselves.

With last week's 10-6 loss to first place Claremont, the Highlanders saw the opportunity to control their own fate slip away. Now while his team must win its final two outings, coach Leo Guest must also await word that either Damien or Glendora has lost to stay in the post-season picture.

The Scots battle district rival Alta Loma Friday night on what has become both teams' home field at Upland stadium. Elsewhere Friday night, Damien battles Don Lugo at Chino District Field while Glendora takes on Chaffey at Citrus College tonight.

Wins by both Damien and Glendora or a Highlander loss will eliminate Upland from the playoff picture, while a victory by the Scots and a loss by either the Spartans or Tartans will keep Guest's club in the running.

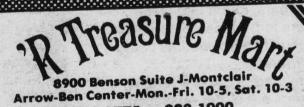

Alta Loma, after using Chaffey College as their home field for years, switched to the UHS field this season in an effort to save money. That means that while it is designated as the Highlanders' home game officially, it won't seem like much of an away game for coach Don Holladay's Braves.

ALHS is coming off a 27-17 loss to Chaffey High School, becoming the Tigers first victim of the '83 season. Running back Andrew Greer was the bright spot of the night for the Braves, garnering 73 yards on 20 carries.

Bare slopes keeps skier rolling along

By Jim Marxen

The "slopes" of Rancho
Cucamonga have never seen anything like it.

Gliding across the city's landscape, Warren Sabak makes cross country skiing look easy.

Sabak doesn't even need snow — he's got wheels.

Roller skiing is his method of preparing students for their first trek in the wilderness.

The "sport" of roller skiing is about 30 to 40 years old, however it's rare to see anyone practicing it in Southern California. Yet Sabak said he feels it's an excellent — and fun — method of teaching cross country skiing.

A cross country ski instructor, he figures roller skiing is about as close as one can come to the real thing.

And with the long, snowless Southern California summers, he can teach all year long.

Although downhill skiing is by far the more popular method of skiing, cross country has attracted more attention recently, Sabak said.

"Downhill skiers outnumber the cross country skiers in this country," Sabak said, "but worldwide the ratio is 10 to 1 (in favor of cross country) because it's so popular in Europe."

Sabak sees a surge of interest in cross country skiing and wants to make sure his students know what their doing when they are in the outdoors.

"With cross country skiing it's easier for a person to have fun right from the start," he said. "They can find very gentle terrain ... that way you don't have to start on something slow."

His two-hour classes are taught in a parking lot behind the Mountain High Recreation shop along Archibald Avenue.

The black asphalt looks nothing like snow, but just about everything Sabak teaches relates to real cross country skiing.

"It's all a matter of balance and technique," he said. "A lot of people out there (in the snow) could really gain by having some halfway decent — or formal — instruction," he said. "Whatever ideas they have, they've usually gotten from friends and that's not the same as instruction."

Sabak is a stickler for technique and balance. He hates things like wasted motions.

"The first thing I tell them to do is to start walking so they have the feel for the (roller) skis," he said. "Then I ask them to become conscious of their movements ... of what their arms and legs are doing."

Skiing better, he added, means less effort and less fatigue.

An instructor for four winters, Sabak met most of his students through friends or at the Mountain High shop where he works.

For $19, he'll strap his students into a pair of roller skis, take them for a two-hour trip around the parking lot and prepare them for a trek in the snow.

But he cautions anyone who's interested in taking up roller skiing as its own sport. Skiis are expensive (upwards to $200) and finding a place to practice is sometimes tough, he said.

Besides, getting onto the snow is what all the training's for.

"Cross country skiing involves so much," Sabak said. "It's being out in the woods, it's aerobic exercise and it really takes your mind off other responsibilities and concerns."

Kathy Frey

It's the next best thing to cross country skiing, says Warren Savak. Roller skis play a big part in Savak's skiing classes.

Golf tourney raises $1,000 for Y

The West End YMCA received $1,000 out of $2,500 raised at the Rancho Grande Kiwanis First Invitational Golf Tournament, held at the Red Hill Country Club. The money will be used, said executive director Bob Huether, for development of YMCA programs in the Rancho Cucamonga area.

Currently the YMCA operates the Sunshine Co. afterschool program and a summer day camp in the city.

"We hope this tournament will be an onging event," said tournament chairman Bob Dutton. "Our eventual goal is the establishment of a YMCA youth and fitness program extension facility in Rancho Cucamonga.

Dutton said he hoped to see a program site eventually developed to serve as a center for programs. The remainder of the $2,500 will be used towards that aim, Dutton said. Huether thanked the Kiwanis, commending them for their effort and support.

The 50-member club has been in existence since 1980 and meets at the Hen and Holstein Restaurant on Friday mornings.
